

DISCOVER NEW BUSINESSES

More than 1,000 new businesses opened in Santa Clara in 2017, joining approximately 12,000 other companies in providing residents with jobs, goods and services. The new enterprises not only provide more options for shopping, dining and services, they generate revenue, such as sales tax, that pays for core City services.

The City of Santa Clara has taken several steps this past year to support a healthy business environment including minimum wage and worker retention ordinances to protect employees. Silicon Valley Power, the City's municipal electric utility, was honored with the 2017 Resource Efficiency & Community Services Award from the California Municipal Utilities Association for its program to help small business customers install energy efficient products and lower energy bills.

Balancing the future needs for commercial and residential development are key elements of the Lawrence Station Area Plan, completed in 2017, and the El Camino Real Precise Plan that is in early stages.

From auto dealers to yoga studios, companies of all types and sizes find Santa Clara a business friendly community.
