As the only working-class member of Santa Clara City Council who also has a child in grade school, I represent needs and perspectives that often get ignored in government. With a strong scientific background, I work in high tech and teach, having served students of all ages as a tutor and an adjunct professor at a local college. My experiences at work and with civic organizations help me address City issues and prepare for the future while maintaining focus on residents. I helped resolve costly stadium litigation, closing gaps and increasing City revenues. I advocate for housing to create communities with mutual benefits for existing and new residents. I work with schools to improve safety and protect families. People are the lifeblood of the City and the basis of democracy. I support -- and am supported by -- people, not special interests, and I vote accordingly.

Cities are more than just housing units. Let us restore vision, emphasizing planning over just development. Let us practice fiscal responsibility by managing rate increases and avoiding costly lawsuits. Let us preserve City resources like our Senior Center, libraries, pools, and parks, so that future generations of Santa Clarans will have room to grow and reasons to stay.
